What is a Notice to Pay Rent or Vacate?

Under Washington state law, a landlord must provide a tenant with a written fourteen-day notice to pay rent or vacate before starting a court proceeding for eviction for non-payment of rent. Usually the terms of your rental agreement determine when rent is due. If you are even one day late in paying rent, then the landlord can provide you with a notice to pay rent or vacate.

What Charges Can Be Listed on a Notice Pay Rent or Vacate?

The only amounts a landlord may require a tenant to pay on a fourteen-day notice to pay rent or vacate are recurring and periodic charges identified in the rental agreement, utilities, and missed payments under an payment agreement for move-in expenses. Other money potentially owed to the landlord—including late payment fees, damages, deposits, legal costs, and attorney's fees—cannot be included in a fourteen day notice to pay or vacate.

Can I Make a Partial Payment to Stop the Eviction?

After a fourteen-day notice to pay rent or vacate is given to a tenant, the landlord is not required to accept partial payments. However, if you pay the full amount listed on the notice within fourteen days after receiving the notice, then the landlord must accept the payment and cannot proceed with an eviction for non-payment of rent. In other words, the notice to pay rent or vacate is the only warning period that the landlord needs to give a tenant before possibly starting the eviction process.

Can I Pay My Rent After the Fourteen Day Notice Expired?

Washington state law now provides tenants with rent owing to keep their tenancy in certain situations by paying back rent owing even after the fourteen day notice period has passed. However, this process is usually not as simple as giving the landlord the back-owed rent. If you want to exercise your rights to keep your tenancy by paying rent owing after the fourteen notice period has passed, contact the resources listed at the bottom of this page for assistance.

Can I Withhold Rent to Get the Landlord to Make Repairs?

Withholding rent in order to get the landlord to make repairs is not specifically allowed under Washington state landlord-tenant law and is usually unsound for tenants. Although the landlord's failure to make necessary repairs may be used as a defense at an eviction hearing, you risk losing the hearing and being immediately evicted. Never withhold rent before speaking with a lawyer about your situation.
