No enumeration of particular powers by this charter shall be deemed to be exclusive.

Article II
THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

Creation and Composition of City Council
Section 2.1 – The Council shall be composed of the Mayor and eight (8) councilmen nominated and elected, as provided hereinafter. At the next general municipal election to be held in the year 1975 on the date prescribed by state law, there shall be elected eight (8) councilmen for terms beginning on the second Monday in January 1976, as set out hereinafter in Section 5.4. Biennially thereafter, on the date prescribed by state law for general municipal elections, four (4) councilmen shall be elected for like terms of four years. Councilmen shall continue in office until their successors are elected and qualified. The Council shall constitute the legislative and governing body of the City and shall have authority, except as otherwise provided in this Charter, to exercise all powers of the City. (Amendment approved by vote of the people September 18, 1973).

Qualifications and Compensation of Councilmen
Section 2.2 – Councilmen shall be qualified electors and shall be residents of the City for two years immediately preceding the time of filing as a candidate and, if running for a district position, shall be residents of their districts for one year immediately preceding the time of filing as candidate or, if appointed to fill a vacancy, the time of appointment. Language Regarding Section 2.7 of the new FOG

The Council may, in connection with the legislative process and as directed by a majority of its members, make investigations into the affairs of the City and the conduct of any City department, office, board or agency. For this purpose the Council may a) subpoena witnesses, b) administer oaths, c) take testimony, and d) require the production of evidence, and e) may invoke the aid of any court of competent jurisdiction to carry out such powers, provided that any witness shall have the right to be represented by counsel. The Council, as a whole, or by committee, may conduct public hearings on matters of public concern.

Notes: This version is based on the Pierce County Charter. It differs from the version previously considered in two substantial ways:

1) a majority of the Council is required for investigation [line 1]

2) the specific investigatory powers are identified [lines 3-4]

Rationale: This is another in a series of checks and balances. It helps ensure transparency in the executive branch, without exposing the executive branch to frivolous inquiries.

Against: The specific powers make the Council too strong.
Providing for Chair & Mayor Pro-tempore

New Language

Chair and Vice Chair of the Council

Section 2.4 – The Council, at its first annual meeting, by a majority vote may designate one of its members as Chair of the Council.

1. The Chair will serve as the presiding officer of the Council.
2. The Chair will serve as Mayor in the event of the Mayor’s resignation, removal from office or death until an election of a new Mayor, as provided for by state law and this charter is concluded.
3. The Chair will serve in the Mayor’s absents when delegated as such by the Mayor in writing to the Council Chair.

Section 2.5 - The Council shall select annually at their first meeting of the year a Vice-Chair who shall serve in the absence of the Council Chair and reserves those powers as outlined by this charter in Section 2.4. Provided to the Chair.

Rational:

The form of government needs to not only build confidence but it needs to be clean and simple. The suggestion to have 1 Person serve as Chair and one person serve as mayor pro-temp is not only confusing but could lead itself to divisive power struggles. Just like our State with Lieutenant Governor and the Federal Government, Vice President, they both serve as the presiding officer and the next in line of succession.
New survey offers tips for implementing Seattle's new city council districts

The city auditor studied other cities with district and hybrid council systems. The results provide practical advice for how to make the new district system work.

By Knute Berger

All members of the Seattle City Council will be up for re-election in 2015 as the city implements its new hybrid system of district and at-large council seats. The current nine at-large council seats will be cut to two, and seven seats will be elected to represent seven new council districts.

Those elections are effectively underway; jockeying has already begun as incumbents decide whether to run at-large, for the district in which they live, or just bow out.

But there are still details of the implementation of districts to be worked out. That process is being spearheaded by city council president Tim Burgess, chair of the Education and Governance committee, along with a working group representing various city departments. One early step is to find out what other cities do, especially cities that elect members by district or have hybrid systems like Seattle's new one.

City Auditor David G. Jones was tasked with surveying other metro systems to answer questions such as do district council members have offices in their districts? Is there any difference in the duties of at-large council members and district ones? Is there any requirement that boards and commissions have a district representative?

Seattle last had a district council system, and for a time a bicameral, hybrid system, in the early 20th century, so getting a handle on the current state-of-the-art around the country is a sensible way to prepare.

In early April, Jones issued the results of his survey in a memo to Burgess. The survey covers Austin, Boston, Denver, Jacksonville, FL, Oakland and San Francisco. All of those cities elect council members by district. Four of them also seat at-large city council members, ranging from five in Jacksonville to one in Oakland.

The questions and the answers shed light on the wonky details that Burgess and Seattle city government are wondering about and also on the experience of other cities. There are no apples-to-apples comparisons, everybody does things a little differently. But some rules of thumb come through loud on clear.

For example, none of the cities organizes or adopts city operating or capital budgets by district. While district priorities might influence budgets, they are not overtly Balkanized in their structure.

Of the cities with a central policy staff that works for the council, Seattle seems to be the most generously staffed: 17 staffers to 9 council members (or 1.88 staffers apiece). Other cities get by with much less help: Boston is at .85 staffers per council member, Denver .46 and Jacksonville .21. San Francisco contracts out requested policy research and budget analysis, at a cost of about $2 million. None of the cities studied assigns central staff by district.

All the cities organize council committees by issue, rather than geography. Most boards and commissions do not require district representation, though in Oakland, as a practical matter where council members make board appointments, they tend to come from their respective districts.

Seattle's auditor asked if any of the district council members keeps an additional office in his or her district. In Denver, all council members, whether at large or district, have a single office. Their two at-large council members and four district council members have downtown offices while the remaining seven district council members have district offices. In Jacksonville, district offices are prohibited. In Boston, some council members maintain district offices but they are paid for with campaign funds. In San Francisco, everyone is housed downtown. In most cities district council members have one office, not two.

A number of the cities have a 3-1-1 hotline for constituent problems, and council members assign aides to handle them.

No city surveyed required the city council president to hold an at-large position.

In terms of the challenges of a district system, Denver praised it: "It seems to work well. We have two At-Large positions that bring a city-wide view to the debates, and all areas of the city have a direct representative. Very democratic." The only complaint is having to redraw the district boundaries every 10 years per the new U.S. Census, which is a built-in requirement of Seattle's districts charter amendment. In general, Denver seems happy with districts. Some constituents would like to dump the two at-large positions, but Denver officials defended the at-large positions, noting that the citywide perspective they bring was a positive.

San Francisco seems conflicted about districts. According to the survey, they switched from an at-large to a district model in 1977. In 1980 they went back to at-large. In 1996, voters decided to go back to districts starting in 2000. Theirs is not a hybrid system and they have 11 districts, four more than Seattle.

Jacksonville's response raised an issue that will be worth watching and anticipating: "The fundamental challenge is competition for limited resources among districts when district conditions and needs vary widely. There is continual debate over the proper way to allocate resources — by equal, fixed amounts per district or according to demonstrable need."

One can well imagine Seattle dealing with the push-pull between the needs of North End neighborhoods like District Five, which wants basic sidewalk infrastructure, and, say, the generally poorer South End's Second District, which has large infrastructure and social service needs.

An issue not raised in the report is what to call the districts. Seattle already has a system of 13 District Councils, and now it has seven Council Districts. While some have questioned the future of the District Councils, for the sake of clarity perhaps Seattle's new Council Districts should be called what we used to call them: Wards.

Dear members of the charter review committee,

Thank you for your service in this important process. Having recently returned to Tacoma after two years away, I have been keenly watching this process and discussion with much interest.

For a long time I have been a proponent of moving to a strong mayor system. I believe for a city of our size and maturity it is a move that is well overdue. Our city's executive needs to be directly accountable to the people and full time. This move will be good for our city's future maturity and growth and civic discourse.

I am convened a proposal to move to seven City Council districts with no at-large council representation. This would be a big mistake -- a seven member Council with five district members is sufficient to assure strong neighborhood representation and geographical diversity in a city the size of Tacoma. While having districts can serve an important function to ensure services and investment reach all corners of the city, an at-large membership serves an important role. At large representatives put by their nature the entire city's interest first. This is an important voice on the council and in civic debates. The at large v district balance we have had is one part of the system that is currently working well. Let's not fix what isn't broken, and instead focus on the major structural overhauls that our government so desperately needs.

I and urge you to adopt a City Council composed of five districts and two at-large seats.

Thank you for considering my input and remarks and for your service for this important yet often times thankless process.

Regards,

Dear Charter Review Committee,

I wanted to expand on my input to your Committee with a few more thoughts on the Mayor-Council-CAO proposal as well as a word in favor of retaining at-large City Council seats.

The Mayor-Council-CAO is an effective and proven way to maintain professional administrative functions while providing for a mayoral office that is clearly part of the executive branch (where a mayor should be), who has the capacity to carry out a vision for the city while being more accountable to voters than is the city manager. This form of city government will be more responsive, visionary, and accountable while remaining competent. It will also likely enliven and strengthen civic debate, which in my view is something Tacoma should foster rather than shy away from as it works to develop a stronger and clearer 21st Century identity.

I am substantially less excited about what I understand is a proposal to move to seven City Council districts with no at-large council representation. This would be a big mistake -- a seven member Council with five district members is sufficient to assure strong neighborhood representation and geographical diversity in a city the size of Tacoma, and at-large membership serves an important unifying role that can help the district members overcome inevitable temptation to err on the side of parochialism. I favor and urge you to adopt a full-time City Council composed of five districts and two at-large seats.

Finally, I'm not sure how the charter amendment(s) will appear on the ballot, but I'm hoping that if you do forward changes to district representation that it is separate from a ballot question concerning the adoption of a Mayor-Council-CAO system. I would be certain to vote for the latter if it's alone, but I might think twice about it if it was tied to moving the Council exclusively to districts.

Thanks for your consideration and for your public service.
